The University of Pennsylvania foot-ball and two in the second. Had it not been for penalties inflicted on the Red and Blue, Cornell would never have been a crowd that filled the sidewalk and imwithin striking distance of the Pennsylvania goal. The Ithaca boys were powerless on the offense until near the close of the game, when Pennsylvania had in an almost entire new team and on the defense they were equally weak. Not a first down was earned by the visitors in the opening half, and only once during this period, did Cornell hold for downs. Pennsylvania was penalized forty-five yards in the first half, and was set back forty yards in the closing period of the game.

Fumble after fumble occurred in the Cornell back field, and on nearly every offense, she would lose the ball. A feature of the game was the fierce tackling of the Pennsylvania boys. On nearly every serimmage, when the Cor-nell team had the bull, there would be one of the visitors laid out. Stevenson, Pennsylvanias quarterback, was finally sent to the side lines by Umpire Edwards for rough play.

CHICAGC, LILL, November 24.—Chicago, 18; Wisconsin, II, was the score today in the hardest fought foot-ball game played on Marshall field this season. The game was replete with surprises and critical situations, which kept the 18,000 spectators on the qui vive from the time of the first kick off until the final whistle blew. The climax was reached in the middle of the second half. Eckereall caught the ball on the kick off on Chicago's three-yard line and started towards Wisconsin's goal. The Wisconsin men came thundering down upon him. Some of them were stopped by Chicago interference, and others. Eckersall dedged until only Stromquist, Wisconsin's full back, blocked the way to a touchdown. Dodging dangerously near the side line, the speedy little quarterback rushed by the outstretched fingers of his opponent grazing his leg as he passed. Two seconds later, he was beneath a pile of squirming humanity behind the Wiscon-

(By Associated Press.) NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—Guy Roche, a sporting man, who killed George Levy fatally wounded late this afternoon in Broadway, between Thirty-fifth and 36th

The shooting occurred in the midst of a crowd that filled the sidewalk and immediately there was wild excitement. Felton turned and dashed through the orowd, followed by hundreds of men and women, who shouted for the police. Running to Seventh Avenue, Felton entered a saloon and was there arrested. He was taken back to where Roche lay and an effort was made to have the wounded man identify him.

"Leave it to me; if I die, all right; if I live, I will make good." was all Roche would say. Roche was hurried to a hospital, where it was raid his condition is critical.

By this time, the crowd had grown to such proportions that reserves had to be called hefore Felton could be taken to a police station. There, two witnesses said they saw Felton fire two shots the instant before Roche full.

"I don't care what they say, I don't know anything about this affair," Felton exclaimed. "I heard the shot in the crowd, and, naturally I wanted to get out of the way. That's why I ran. I have had enough trouble to last me to the ond of my life."

Felton is said to have come from Chicago several years ago.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND PEOPLE SWARMED OVER THE FIELD, BEYOND ALL CONTROL

But It Was Good Natured, Joking With the Police, Who Were Powerless-Carolina Made a Splendid Fight, Which at Times Looked as If It Would Be Successful-Carpenter Was Star Player of the Contest-Score 12 to 11 in Favor of Virginia.

University of Virginia, 12; University of North Carolina, 11. Virginia made two touchdowns and kicked both goals; Carolina scored two touchdowns, but missed the first goal. That, in brief, tells the story of the great annual foot-ball game between the two universities.

As had been forecast, the teams were so evenly matched that it was toss-up to pick the winner. The crowd-well, it certainly must have equalled 15,000 people at a conservative estimate. Such a throng never before witnessed a foot-ball game in this city, and it may be many years before such another gathers to witness any sport in this city. The grand stand, the uncovered stands on three sides of the field, and all available standing room were massed with brightly bedecked humanity, and the people overflowed the grounds until the game had to be several times stopped and reinforcements asked to get them off the field. When the game was at its zenith in point of interest, it seemed from the grand stand that almost every foot of seating space and every one of standing room that afforded a glimpse of the gridiron was pre-empted by the enthusiastic and at times deliriously excited throng.

The fortunes of the battle wavered with such regularity that the interest was maintained eyery moment until the referee's whistle announced the end. Before Virginia scored its last touchdown many thought the game had been called, and that Carolina had won—11 to 6. This was due to the fact that the crowd had surged upon the gridfron to such an extent that play had to be suspended for nearly ten minutes. Not antil Virginia began preparations to try for goal was it known to many that a touchdown had been scored, and that the game was not over. Many were leaving the ground when Warren began sighting the ball for the try for goal that meant so much to his team, and to the thousands who had made wagers on the result. If he failed at goal, the score was a tie, the game a drawn battle. The giant Carolinians, in their blue and white, lined up stolidly beneath the goal posts to wait, and, if possible, to block the kick that meant defeat drawn game. Fickle fortune had smiled on the men from Chanel Hill but, at the very hast moment she dallied with the Virginians, and final fell into their willing arms. Warren's try for goal went straight toward the posts, but too low to get over the bar. It would have been a failure had no har overzealous Carolinian leaged into the air and touched the ball just before it reached the bar, causing it to bound over with the point that spelled victory.

THE VERY IRONY OF FATE.

It was the very irony of fate that the Carolinians should have lost the game as the direct result of an effort to prevent a score. Had he touched the ball it would have gone under the bar, and the score would have

Even after that the team got at it again, and Virginia kicked toward the west goal, but before half a dozen rushes the end came, and the Carolinlans walked slowly and disconsolately toward their dressing rooms, while the students from the University surged upon the field and bore off the winners, intoxicated with the sweets of triumph. An animated wilder-ness of fluttering orange and blue covered the park. The Carolina banners had all disappeared or drooped in sorrow in the nerveless hands that held them. It was war, and the glory went to the victors. The visitors had many loyal supporters, however, and these were compensated in some measure for their bitter disappointment by their admiration of the splendid game put up by their fellows and their gallant bid for victory, which was lost by the narrowest possible margain. Of course, there are many explanations, and "ifs" and "ands," but the whole story is told when it is said that Virginia's victory was deserved, and that Carolina certainly got all she was entitled to.

Such a magnificent assemblage has perhaps never gathered to witness a game on a Southern gridiron. The spectacle, the series of spectacles, in this panorama of gorgeous color, life and motion would be difficult to surpass. From the very degree of the great white-barred oblong back on the south to the grand stand and bleachers that bound that side, a surging sea of humanity swayed and ebbed, rising to the topmost tier To the east the small stands recently re-erected, were banked with people, and on the ground below they stood in rows extending backward from very goal line itself. A similar condition existed on the west side the field, save that there were no seats there. On the north side of the field along the low fence that protects the gridiron from encroachment, there was a 110-yard line of humanity banked for three or four rows deep, on the low stands just erected there, several thousands were massed. Still further to the north all the remaining space was occu ied by carriages, tally-hos and hacks and vehicles of every sort. CROWD SWARMED EVERYWHERE.

CROWD SWARMED EVERYWHERE.

At the foot of the stand and bleachers on the south the crowd was so congested that there was no passing either way, and hardly room to turn in one's place. The game had begun before several thousands had gotten in view of the field of play. Suddenly a swarm of men and women rounded, the west corner of the bleachers, and surged upon the field like an ever-rising tide until all the intervening space was filled and many actually encroached upon the field of combat. Under these conditions the officials very properly called the game until the field was cleared. The police force on hand was inadequate to the task, even with the aid of the twenty-two players, the officials of the game, the coaches, newspaper men and county officers. Finally Mayor McCarthy ordered that an extra detail of police he called, and they soon arrived, headed by Captain Kerse, resplendent in called, and they soon arrived, headed by Captain Kerse, resplendent in his new decorations and gold braid; Sergeant Sowell, a squad of regular patrolmen. With their assistance the crowd was pressed back, ropes were stretched and the teams again lined up and play was resumed. Even after this hundreds came, and at every opportunity the restless and excited throng burst its barriers and rushed pell-mell upon the field by hundreds. Several times play had to be stopped to enable the field to be cleared. The progress of the game and its result were not affected by the encroachment of the crowd, for the officials just would not play until the field was clear. The ball was picked up and carried around until the gridiron stood out clear of trespassers. A DECORATED CROWD.

The crowd was never more liberally decorated, nor more enthusiastic than that of yesterday. Virginia probably had the more adherents among the thousands of men and women, but when Carolina scored or Carpenter made one of his sensational end runs the Carolinans created such a flutter of blue and white flags and banners and ribbons that it seemed indeed that the men from "down home" were in the majority. When the tide of battle veered, however, and Virginia scored the light blue and white disappeared almost from view, and the scene was transformed into a riot of orange and navy blue. The tide of victory ebbed and flowed, and with it the human kaleidoscope changed its hues. It was indeed a riot of color, a gorgeous color scheme that cannot be adequately described as the animated throng cheered and yelled and danced with glee. When Virgina's first score was made in the second half such a pandemonium and such a forest of waving flags were never heard or seen here. The crowds sang and yelled and cheered in unison, individually and in discordant confus on. Away to the north the strains of the band could scarcely be heard, and miany knew not of its presence. Thousands of dollars must have been spent in flags, ribbons, canes and bits of appropriate color, and every bit was in svidence at one time or another in the two hours and more of the contest. contest.

The game was won on its merits by Virginia. But for two costly The game was won on its merits by Virginia. But for two costill errors—one of play and the other of judgment—Carolina would not have scored, and certainly should not have had but one touchdown. But that is foot-ball, errors and all. The estimate of the two teams made by The Times-Dispatch yesterday proved absolutely correct. It was stated that the two were so well matched that it was a toss-up to pick the winner. Such proved to be the case. It was also stated that Virginia's was stronger in the line than Carolina, and that Carolina had the heavier and faster backs. This proved absolutely correct. Thousands of dollars were wagered on the result at even money. A few bets were made as to scores, and one of 1600
